MIXING PAINT

The first to join a table of paint, brushes, and jars were Lila and Sol. They quickly became interested in mixing paint, and each chose a color that they wanted to make. After some discussion and suggestions from observing friends, Lila decided that she was going to mix red and yellow to see if it made orange, and Sol was going to use red and blue to try to make purple. They were thrilled to see that their choices indeed made the colors they wanted! They then asked for paper so that they could try out their unique shades of orange and purple. By this time, quite a few other children had become interested and they wanted to experiment with making colors of their own.

In the middle, "spinach green", mixed by Margaret and named by Cyla.

Elena predicted that her mixture would make "dark purple".

Camryn chooses a unique palette of white, yellow, and black.

Margaret made a painting using her unique mixed colors.
