

Washing Construction Trucks

September 15th, 2016

As part of our water week, we washed the construction trucks from the playground with soapy water and brushes. A group of five: Preston, Huck, Deniz, Sinclair, and Aleita, expressed immediate interest in the experience, so we took our trucks out to the breezeway and got to work. The whole group happily began swirling their brushes in the bubbly water. Aleita particularly enjoyed sudsing up her brush and vigorously swishing the water around to make more bubbles. Sinclair loved washing the trucks and he went on to wash the nearby table and chair, too.

“Washy wash wash!” he cheered happily as he worked. Deniz scrubbed the trucks until he saw Sinclair moving on to clean other surfaces. He then decided to scrub the concrete surface of the breezeway. Preston enjoyed pouring water from a pitcher onto the bed of the dump truck and then dumping the poured water onto the ground. Huck initially decided to wash one of his own toy cars and then moved on to detail the tires of the construction vehicles. “I need bubbles!” he said, as he dunked his brush into the sudsy water. This group really loved this experience. I wonder if they would also enjoy a baby washing experience or other cleaning/scrubbing experiences.
