

Collaborative Building By Kahlan and Helena

January 18, 2017

Over the course of an hour and a half, Kahlan and Helena worked together to create an impressive structure that they called "A ballerina school where they learn to do ballet". This process was long and happened with very little talking. The two seemed to have unique roles which occurred very naturally; Kahlan picked out which blocks would be used next, and Helena placed them. They then observed the placement of the blocks. Sometimes they moved them because the chosen spot didn't seem stable enough, but mostly they marveled at the evolution of their creation. After they had used every block available in our classroom, they brought the toy people to their ballerina school and imagined that they were making and enjoying "a breakfast".
