

Henry and James at the Farm February 6, 2012

The trek down the hill into the farm is usually filled with the excitement of all there is to see. James is very focused on his footing as he walks on the rough terrain. As usual James and Henry spent most of their time looking at and listening to the chickens. Every time the rooster would crow, James and Henry turned their heads toward the sound. Later, when the chicken obsession subsided, the two boys discovered the table of farm animals that the toddlers brought from the school. They also found radishes that had been pulled from the ground. We are sure that there are many other adventures to be had at our neighborhood farm!
