

Clay Week, Day 2 – Lila's Evolution with Clay Work - July 14th, 2015

While many exciting discoveries occurred during our second day of clay exploration, Lila's intense involvement deserves dedicated documentation. Lila often shies away from play that's liable to get her messy but her attitude towards clay today was completely changed. Without any of the hesitation & disinterest we saw in her yesterday, she delved into work at all three of the clay stations set up. She used tools to cut pieces, made designs with her pieces, pierced through clay with dowels (called "rolling pins" since she held up the clay by the dowel on each side), & used clay as a stamp on mirrors. Her work was elaborate, inquisitive, & sometimes collaborative.
