

The children's attraction to the colored bins indicated to the adults that we need to revisit colors as a study concept on a deeper level. There was much conversation & experimentation regarding the mixing potentials; note the discovery of green in the photo below.

Today we enjoyed the first official Water Day of the summer with bins of colored primary colored water, a baby washing station, a splash pool, & good old-fashioned hose running. For the first half hour, most of the Blue Jays gravitated to either the color bins (Adele, Parker, Violet) or the baby station (Helena, Lila). By the end of the morning, when the sun was becoming powerful, the whole class invented an exciting game of "You Can't Catch Me" wherein they lightheartedly dodged the the spray of Kalei's hose. The whole group, adults notwithstanding seemed filled with joy.

Water Day: Blue Jays + Hummingbirds --- June 10th, 2016