

Zac and Adele
January 27, 2012

Our youngest babies are seven and six months old respectively. Zac is sitting up on his own and trying hard to crawl. Adele is close to sitting up by herself and continues to “suffer through” tummy time so she can build up her arm strength for crawling. Today while Henry and James were in the toddler room and Cruz and Nate were sleeping, Zac and Adele had some quiet floor time. They were together on the floor for almost thirty minutes and spent the first moments looking at each other. Adele seemed to be interested in the puzzle piece that Zac was playing with because almost immediately after he put it down she reached out for it to put in her own mouth. She spent the next ten minutes happily sucking on the wooden puzzle piece. As we know putting things in their mouth is a young infants way of exploring the things around them. And so Zac and Adele explored many materials together today!
